

Abstract

A structural component for mounting in a lower region of a motor vehicle bumper arrangement comprises a longitudinal dimension and is constructed in cross-section such that its spring characteristic in relation to bending stress in a direction (x) substantially at right angles to its longitudinal dimension corresponds substantially to the spring characteristic of a part of the bumper arrangement located above and adjacent to the structural component.